

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE.

THE plan of this book is the same as that of "Materials for Latin Prose."

The work consists of selections from English authors, many of the Exercises having been set in different Examinations, chiefly in the Senate House at Cambridge, or in the various Colleges, or for University Scholarships. The Exercises have been graduated in difficulty, and hints for the best way of rendering particular phrases are given in the Notes, as much as possible indirectly, by quoting passages which suggest appropriate methods of turning the sentence in question. A few general rules are prefixed to the Exercises.

For two of the translations in the Key, I am indebted to a friend.

First. After ὅπως and ὅπως μή, it is very usual to have the future indicative instead of the subjunctive or optative mood: Καλὸν παρασκευάζειν ὅπως ὡς βέλτισται ἔσονται τῶν πολιτῶν αἱ ψυχαί; and Αἰσχίνης τὸ καθ' αὐτὸν ὅπως ἐπὶ τοῖς ἐχθροῖς ἡ πόλις ἔσται παρεσκεύασεν. By this plan the result is viewed more independently; as a thing that will really occur, rather than as a matter of mere intention.

Secondly. That even after a main verb in the past, the final sentence is sometimes put in the subjunctive, in order to depict the fact, not as part of a representation belonging to the past, but as present: Οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τοὺς ξυμμάχους ἐδεδίδεσαν σφῶν μὴ ἀποστῶσιν. This is to be attributed to the desire of the Hellenic mind to represent events dramatically as actually passing at the period of the writer's account of them.

After a past tense of a verb of declaring, thinking, and the like, the present, perfect, and future infinitive are used to express these times, with reference to the time indicated by the principal verb; just as in Latin dixit se esse means, he said that he was, at the time of saying this. So Οὐκ ἔφασαν τὰς ναῦς παρεῖναι is, they said the ships were not present then, at the time of their saying this: Τοὺς στρατιωτὰς ἤξειν ἐνόμιζον, Ἀρμόδιος καὶ Ἀριστογείτων ἐνόμισαν μεμνηνῆσθαι. These tenses in English are equivalent to the imperfect, future past, and pluperfect.

After verbs of asserting, thinking, and the like, the aorist infinitive has a past meaning: Πατρὸς λέγεται ὁ Κῦρος γενέσθαι Καμβύσον, but otherwise it has no past meaning, and is used to denote a single action, as distinguished from 'the repeated or lasting act conveyed by the present infinitive.

Verbs denoting hope, promise, surmise, and the like, generally take the future: Ἀνέλπιστος ὦν σωθήσεσθαι. Also sometimes verbs of intending, asking, &c., take a future, if it is desirable to point out that the action implied in the infinitive is future or impending, compared to the time of the main verb.

II. The Oratio Obliqua.

In a dependent sentence, after verbs of asserting, thinking, and the like, with ὡς or ὅτι, where a thought, opinion, &c., is conveyed, belonging to a principal verb in the past, the optative mood is used. Ἐλεγον ὅτι ἡ ὁδὸς ἔσται πρὸς βασιλέα μέγαν, Ἐγνωνσαν οἱ στρατιῶται ὅτι κενὸς ὁ φόβος εἶη. If the principal verb is in the present, then the indicative is used, not the optative.

Observe, however, that very often the Oratio Obliqua merges into the Oratio Directa, for the sake of more liveliness, Ἐλεγον οἱ ἐπιτήδείοί μου ὡς ἐλπίζουσι, Ἐγνων Ἀρχίδαμος ὅτι οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι οὐδὲν ἐνδύσουσιν. Sometimes these forms are used promiscuously, Ἐλεγον ὅτι Κῦρος μὲν τέθηκεν, Ἀριαῖος δὲ πεφευγὼς εἶη.

III. Participles.

The absolute case is the genitive; but a common form is the accusative, with ὡς or ὥσπερ, in the meaning of “under the idea that :” Ἀπεβλέψατε πρὸς ἀλλήλους, ὡς αὐτὸς μὲν ἕκαστος οὐ ποιήσων τὸ δόξαν, τὸν δὲ πλησίον πράξοντα. Observe also that δεόν, ἐξόν, προσήκον, παρέχον, μέλον, μεταμέλον, δόξαν, are used absolutely : Οὐδεὶς τὸ μείζον αἰρήσεται, ἐξὸν τὸ ἐλαττον, “when it is possible, &c.”

Τυγχάνω, λανθάνω, δηλός and φανερός εἰμι, φαίνομαι take participles : verbs of seeing, knowing, remembering, showing, take a participle, οἰδά σε ὄντα and οἶδα αὐτὸς ὢν.

IV. The Article with Proper names.

The general rule is, that the first time a person or place is mentioned, the article is omitted, as he or it is not supposed to be known ; on a second mention the article may be used. If the person or place is so well known as to be recognised at once, the article may be used on the first mention, as ὁ Σωκράτης, ὁ Ἀλέξανδρος.

V. On ἄν.

This particle is used with the imperfect and aorist of the indicative, to express that a certain result would have followed, if a certain condition had been fulfilled ; and of course, from the very nature of the indicative mood, implies that the result did not follow, because the condition was not fulfilled. If it is requisite to point out that the result does not, as it is, occur, and that the condition is assumed contrary to the present actual state of the case, then the imperfect is used: if the condition and result belong to the past, then the aorist is used: and the tenses are the same in each case, in both clauses.

Briefly, then, εἰ εἶχον ἐδίδουν ἄν is, if I had it now (but I have not), I would now be giving it: an hypothesis, already determined, referred to a present epoch.

εἰ ἔσχον ἔδωκα ἄν, if I had had it then, I would then have given it: an hypothesis already determined, referred to a past epoch.

Of course a combination of these two forms is possible, because it may be requisite to point out that, although the supposition may be entirely past, the effect or the conditional result may be regarded as present; or to view the supposition or result as a lasting one. Εἰ δὲ τοῦτο πάντες ἐποιούμεν, ἅπαντες ἂν ἀπωλόμεθα, if we had all kept doing so, &c. Εἰ μὴ τότε ἐπραξας τοῦτο, οὐκ ἂν ἐπτάχνης, you would not now be a beggar, if you had not then done this.

To express an entirely future hypothesis, as yet undecided, and without any view being expressed as to whether it ever will be decided, ἄν is used with the optative, after εἰ, also with an optative Εἰ ἔχοιμι, διδοίην ἄν, if I should have it, I would give it. This is a pure hypothesis, and nothing is stated as regards the probability or improbability of having; it only states that if I should have it, I will then give it.

This differs from ἐὰν ἔχω δώσω, this last implying that the case is possible, although uncertain at present, but that it will probably be determined by subsequent experience. Of course the difference is very minute, and not likely to be always observed.

VI. On particles of time.

All particles of time, as ὅτε, ὁπότε, ἐπειδή, μέχρι, ὡς, and the like, have two constructions. If they relate to some one definite event in a past sentence, they take the indicative: Φίλοι ὠνομάζοντο Φιλίππου ἕως Θετταλίαν ὑπὸ Φιλίππῳ ἐποίησαν. Προῆλθεν ἔσπευ ἔς Ἀθήνας ἀφίκετο.

If these particles denote an indefinite point of time and future contingency, they are used with the subjunctive and take ἄν. Σπονδαὶ ἔσονται μέχρις ἂν βασιλεῖ τὰ παρ' ὑμῶν διαγγελθῇ. In the Oratio Obliqua this subjunctive changes into the optative, and the ἄν disappears. Πέμψω ὅταν δυνηθῶ becomes ἔφη πέμψειν ὅτε δυνηθείη.

If the verb is past, and these particles of time and relatives are used to denote, not what took place in one particular instance, but what occurred frequently, then the optative is used, under the title of the optative of indefinite frequency. Οὓς μὲν ἴδοι εὐτάκτως καὶ σωπῇ ἰόντας, προσελαύνων τίνες τε εἶεν ἤρετο καὶ ἐπεὶ πύθοιτο ἐπῆναι: Ἐπεὶ πλησιάζοι ὁ ἵππος, whenever the horse came near.

VII. Observe, that if a verb takes the infinitive after it, and the subject of the two verbs is the same, then the subject of the infinitive is in the nominative case, not the accusative; as is clearly marked in Cleon's sentence in Thucydides: ἔφη οὐκ αὐτὸς ἀλλ' ἐκείνον στρατηγεῖν.

VIII. Οὐ and μή.

The first of these particles states a negative absolutely; the latter is used when the negation is put forward as a conception, or subjectively; consequently whenever it is stated that something is not, or does not, absolutely, οὐ is used: οὐκ ἔθανε, he was not killed. With the infinitive, therefore, and the imperative, μή is used, in accordance with this distinction, and in all hypothetical sentences, or in expressing a wish or purpose.

Μή is also used after ὅτε, ὁπότε, ὅπου, &c., when these particles of time are used to denote indefinite frequency, and whenever they take ἄν.

Also generally after ὅς, ὅστις, ὅσοι in the sense of "all who," "such things as," &c.

Also with a participle, when a condition is implied, equivalent to εἰ μή with a finite verb: μὴ παρών, if he is not present; οὐ παρών, since he is not present.

Also with participles and adjectives when they have the article, denoting a certain class or kind—Αἱ μὴ καλὰ ἐπιθυμίαι, τῶν στρατιωτῶν οἱ μὴ δυνάμενοι, —unless individual definite persons are meant, when οὐ is generally used.

IX. On the order of words.

Very little can be said on this head, the great guide being the amount of emphasis intended to be conveyed: the beginning and the close of a sentence being the emphatic places.

Kindred or opposed words are generally put in juxtaposition, as κακὸς κακῶς ἀπόλοιτο, ἐξ ἀγαθῶν κακοὶ ἀπέβησαν.

Enclitics, as τίς, τέ, τοί, γέ, μού, σου, &c., cannot be the first words in a sentence: nor can ἄρα, αἶ, δέ, δῆ, γάρ, μέν, μήν, νύν, οὔν, τοίνυν.

X. On the Attic dialect.

Uncontracted forms are to be avoided, being inadmissible in pure Attic, except in a few cases, which must be learned by observation. Πλέω, to sail, does not contract the first person singular or plural, or the third person plural of the present or imperfect: nor does δέομαι, to ask.

In the contracted verbs the optative in οίην is commoner than the regular form, φιλοίη than φιλοῖ.

The old Attic writers, Thucydides, and the Dramatists use ξύν for σύν, as ξύμμαχοι for σύμμαχοι; σς for ττ, as τάσσω for τάττω; ρσ for ρρ, as θαρσείν for θαρρεῖν: these last forms were adopted by the later Attic writers, such as Demosthenes, Aristotle, and his successors. Plato lies between the two, but inclines to the later forms.

ENGLISH SELECTIONS.

I.

(DIRECT COMMISSIONS, 1862.)

MINOS, the king of the Cretans, ¹being master of the sea in those times, ²on being informed of the flight of Dædalus in Sicily, ³determined to make an expedition against that island. ⁴Having therefore made ready a considerable naval force, he set sail from Crete, and ⁵reached that part of the Agrigentine territory ⁶which was afterwards from him called Minoa. There he landed his forces, and having sent messengers to King Cocalus, ⁷demanded Dædalus for punishment.

Cf. Thucyd. viii. 63, 'Εν τούτῳ δὲ οἱ Χίοι τε θαλασσοκράτορες μᾶλλον ἐγένοντο.

² On being informed, &c.
Turn by "hearing that he is fled." Ἀκούω takes either the infinitive after it, or ὡς or ὅτι with an optative after a past tense; or again a participle; as in Xenoph. Anab. i. 8, 13, Κλέαρχος ἤκουε ἔξω ὄντα βασιλέα, &c.

³ Determined. Δοκεῖν can be used here impersonally, in which case Minos will be in the dative. Herodotus (iii. 107) uses ἐπιστρατεύεσθαι with ἐπὶ. It is also followed by a dative.

⁴ Having therefore made, &c.
Cf. Thucyd. i. 4, Μίνως γὰρ ναυτικὸν ἐκτέησατο.

⁵ Reached that part, &c.
For the order in such topographical statements, cf. Thucyd. ii. 18, 'Ο δὲ στρατὸς προῖων ἀφίκετο τῆς Ἀττικῆς ἐς Οἰνόην πρῶτον. Also cf. Herod. i. 2, Καταπλώσαντας γὰρ μακρῇ νηϊ, and in the same chapter, Τῆς Φοινίκης ἐς Τύρον προσχόντας.

⁶ Which was afterwards, &c.
Cf. Thucyd. vi. 2, 'Η χώρα ἀπὸ Ἰταλοῦ οὕτως Ἰταλία ἐπωνομάσθη.

Cf. Herod. i. 3, Πρῶτον πέμψαντας ἀγγέλους ἀπαιτεῖν τε Ἑλένην.

II.

At last, after he had reigned ¹nearly forty years, it chanced that one day he called his people together in ²the Field of Mars, near ³the Goat's Pool, when, all on a sudden, ⁴there arose a dreadful storm, and all was as dark as night; and the rain and thunder and lightning were so terrible that all the people fled from the field and ⁵ran to their several homes. At last the storm was over, and they came back to the Field of Mars, but Romulus ⁶was nowhere to be found; for Mars, his father, had carried him up to heaven in his chariot.—ARNOLD'S History of Rome, Vol. i.

III.

The world had never taken so full note
Of what thou wert, hadst thou not been undone;
And only thy affliction 'hath begot
More fame than thy best fortune could have done.

² Field of Mars. Follow the analogy of καὶ εἰ μὴ ἡ βουλή ἢ ἐξ Ἀρείου πάγου τὸ πρᾶγμα αἰσθόμενῃ, Demosth. De Coron. 271.

³ Goat's Pool. Cf. Thucyd. ii. 15, Καὶ τῇ κρήνῃ τῇ νῦν μὲν Ἐννεακρούνη καλουμένη.

⁴ There arose a dreadful storm. Cf. Thucyd. ii. 4, "Τετοῦ ἔμα πολλοῦ ἐπιγεγομένου, and Herod. viii. 13, "Ὀμβρος τε λάβρος, καὶ ρεύματα ἰσχυρὰ βρονταὶ τε σκληραί, and i. 87, ἐξαπίνης νέφεα καὶ χειμῶνα τέ καταραγῆναι.

⁵ Ran to their several homes. Cf. Thucyd. ii. 23, Ἀφικόμενοι δὲ διελύθησαν κατὰ πόλεις ἑκαστοί. For the mood after ὥστε, see XL., note 3.

⁶ Was nowhere to be found. Cf. Herod. vii. 166, Ὅτε γὰρ ζῶντα οὕτε ἀποθανόντα φωνῆσαι οὐδαμοῦ γῆς.

⁷ Hath begot more fame. Cf. Thucyd. ii. 11, Ὡς οὖν μεγίστην δόξαν οἰσόμενοι, &c. Turn by "being afflicted, thou hast carried off more fame than by prospering in the greatest degree."

For ever by adversity are wrought
 The greatest works of admiration,
¹ And all the fair examples of renown
 Out of distress and misery are grown.
 It is not but the tempest that doth show
 The seaman's cunning, but the field that tries
 The captain's courage; ² and we come to know
 Best what men are ³ in their worst jeopardies.

IV.

Craterus, their commander, ⁴ was the best of Alexander's generals. The Greeks, on the other hand, were suffering from the greatest ⁵ want of discipline, and the troops, in large numbers, had abandoned their standards. There was evidently discord in the Greek camp, ⁶ and we may suppose that Antipater made good use of the great Macedonian treasures in endeavouring to create a Mace-

¹ And all the fair examples, &c. Turn by "they who were in trouble . . . these wrought the greatest deeds we hear of" (ὡν ἀκοή ἴσμεν). Cf. Herod. i. 59, Νίσιαιν τε ἑλὼν καὶ ἄλλα ἀποδεξάμενος (ἀποδείκνυμι) ἔργα. Ἀποφαίνεσθαι is also used in the same way.

² And we come to know, &c. Use ἐξετάζεσθαι or ἐξελέγχεσθαι, and turn the sentence passively, "men are proved what they are (οἱ τοὶ εἰσιν), having come to the extreme of ill."

³ In their worst jeopardies. Cf. Thucyd. viii. 27, Τῷ μεγίστῳ κινδύνῳ περιπίπτειν, and Isocrates has ταῖς ἐσχάταις συμφοραῖς περιπεσόντες, and Herodotus ἐς τὸ ἐσχατὸν κακοῦ ἀφικνεῖς.

⁴ Was the best of. Turn by "if any of those about Alexander was conspicuous in warlike matters." Cf. Thucyd. ii. 37, ὥς ἕκαστος ἐν τῷ εὐδοκίμῳ.

⁵ Want of discipline. Cf. Herod. vi. 11, Εἰ δὲ μαλακία τε καὶ ἀταξία διαχρήσεσθε.

donian party among the Greeks. But after Craterus had joined Antipater, the Macedonians were superior to the Greeks in numbers also; the cavalry alone were nearly equal, because ¹that of the Thessalians was with the Greeks. ²Antipater now had 40,000 foot and 5,000 horse, and the Greeks only 25,000 foot and 3,500 horse. ³But what a difference of discipline must there have been between the militia of the Athenians and the veterans of Alexander! Most of the Ætolians remained at home; many other Greeks were obliged to watch the smaller ⁴tribes in the interior, which had not joined them, and many had no desire to come forward. The Greek army, therefore, was much too weak.—NIEBUHR.

V.

The Ætolians were at Thermopylæ ⁵with a large force, but the numbers of their hoplites are ⁶in-

¹ That of the Thessalians. Cf. Herod. v. 103, Ὡς ἐνέπρησαν τὰς Σάρδεις τότε σφί καὶ αὕτη προσεγένετο.

² Antipater now had, &c. Cf. Herod. vii. 184, Τοῦ δὲ πεζοῦ ἐβδόμηκοντα καὶ ἑκατὸν μυριάδες ἐγίνοντο, τῶν δὲ ἱππέων οὐκ ἔτι μυριάδες.

³ But what a difference. Turn by "but the troops once with Alexander, being well disciplined, were wonderfully different (ὑπερφυῶς ὥς) from the Athenians, unversed in war." Cf. Thucyd. i. 141, Ἐπειτα χρονίων πολέμων ἄπειροι.

⁴ Tribes in the interior. Cf. Thucyd. vi. 88, Τῶν δὲ τὴν μεσόγειαν ἔχόντων, and viii. 4, Μάλιστα δὲ τὰ τῶν ξυμμάχων διασκοποῦντες ὅπως μὴ σφῶν ἀποστήσονται.

⁵ With a large force. Cf. Thucyd. iv. 94, Πανστρατιάς γενομένης; πανστρατία is also used adverbially.

credible and exaggerated. After the two armies had thus harassed each other for some time, a part of the Gauls forced their way across the western range of Mount Œta, into Upper Ætolia, conquered Callion, ¹extirpated its whole population, and altogether raged in the country with the most ²inhuman brutality, so that the Ætolians quitted Thermopylæ and ³proceeded to meet them. ⁴The success of the Gauls in Ætolia seems to have been limited to Callion; and ⁵in all the other parts of that mountainous country they were attacked by, and suffered great loss at the hands of the infuriated Ætolians. ⁶The Gauls then returned to the Sperchius, having gained their object, the withdrawal of the Ætolians from Thermopylæ. The other Gauls, under Brennus, now ⁷went round the heights of Thermopylæ by the same footpaths' on the Trachinian mountains, by which the Persians, in former times, had been led by

² Inhuman brutality. Either use "beyond human nature" (πέρα), or "wrought things too terrible for man" (ἢ κατ' ἀνθρώπου). Cf. Thucyd. i. 137, Ὅς κακὰ μὲν πλείστα εἰργασμαὶ τὸν ὑμέτερον οἶκον.

³ Proceeded to meet them. Use ἐπιβοηθεῖν.

⁴ The success of the Gauls. Adopt the common form ὀρίζεσθαι μέχρι; and see on Exercise LXXI.

⁵ In all the other parts. Use Πανταχοῦ ἄλλοθι.

⁷ Went round the heights, &c. Turn by "crossed the heights, going round by the same path," &c. For the next words, cf. the expression of Herodotus (vii. 214), Περιηγησάμενοι τοῖς Πέρασσι τὸ οὖρος.

Ephialtes. The Phocians who were stationed there were overpowered, notwithstanding their brave defence, and retreated to the other Greeks. The allies would have been completely lost, had not the Athenian galleys, which were anchoring as near as possible to the coast, received the fugitives, and kept the Gauls away from the coast by means of their catapulta. The Athenians ¹conveyed the fugitives to Eubœa; the Boeotians returned to their own country, and the whole Greek army disappears. Heraclea still defended itself.

VI. (a.)

²Every good political institution must have a preventive operation as well as a remedial. ³It ought to have a natural tendency to exclude bad men from the government, and ⁴not to trust for the safety of the State to subsequent punishment alone, punishment which has ever been tardy and uncertain, and which, ⁵when power is suffered in bad hands,

² Every good political institution, &c. Turn by "in the polity intending to be well administered." Cf. Plato, Rep. 462 D, Τοῦ τοιούτου ἐγγύτατα ἢ ἀριστα πολιτευομένη πόλις οἰκεῖ. Οἰκεῖσθαι, of course, is also used in the same sense. For preventive, &c., use ὑπάρχειν δεῖ οὐ μόνον διορθωτικόν τι ἀλλὰ καὶ κωλυτικόν.

³ It ought to have a natural tendency, &c. Cf. Thucyd. ii. 64, Πάντα γὰρ πέφυκε καὶ ἐλασσοῦσθαι. Or use οἷος εἶναι with an infinitive.

⁴ Not to trust for, &c. Turn by "not to imperil the State by only punishing the criminal with penalties (ζημία), being ever tardy . . . and sometimes (ἔστιν δτε) likely to fail, &c." Cf. Herod. viii. 60, Κινδυνεύσεις τε ἀπάσῃ τῇ Ἑλλάδι. Or Περί τῶν ὅλων κινδυνεύειν in Polybius.

⁵ When power is suffered. Cf. Herod. i. 89, οὐ περιείδον may chance to fall rather on the injured than the criminal.

VI. (b.)

They were thus engaged when the Athenian armament ¹appeared. The Æginetans abandoned the ²unfinished fortifications, and took refuge in the upper town, and besought the Lacedæmonians to aid them in defending it. But the danger appeared too great to their allies, who retreated to a height from which they could ³watch the issue in safety. The Athenians, as soon as they landed, advanced with their whole force against Thyrea, which they stormed and committed to the flames. The surviving Æginetans ⁴were carried to Athens, and with them a Lacedæmonian officer, named Tantalus, who commanded in the town. ⁵He was consigned to the same custody with his countrymen from Sphacteria. The suspected Cytherians were transported to various islands.—THIRLWALL'S Greece.

After this expedition the remaining Gauls turned eastward. They did not repeat their invasion of Greece, ¹for they did not form a State, but only a complex of hosts that had accidentally met, and they had encountered too many difficulties, the Ætolians being too powerful. Before the expedition to Delphi, they had ²divided themselves into three armies, one of which had marched into Greece, and another into Macedonia against Sosthenes. The third host, under Leonnorius and Lutarius, had gone eastward and ravaged Thrace. Ptolemy, a son of Lysimachus, seems to have still ³possessed a remnant of the empire in Thrace; this the Gauls seem to have destroyed, and a portion of them remained in Thrace. For full seventy years after this time, ⁴there existed a Gallic empire in Thrace, of which our history takes no notice, though its existence is undoubted; ⁵it was not till the time of the Hannibalian war that it was destroyed under Canarus. The Gauls advanced as far as the Propontis, besieged Byzantium, and inflicted sufferings upon the Greek colonies.

Solon. Let me put to you a few questions, ¹ near to the point: you will answer them, I am confident, easily and affably.

Pisistratus, have you felt yourself the happier, when, in the fulness of your heart, you have made a large offering to the gods?

Pisistratus. Solon, ² I am not impious: I have made many such offerings to them, and have always been the happier.

Sol. ³ Did they need your sacrifice?

Pis. ⁴ They need nothing from us mortals; but I was happy in the performance of what I have been taught as my duty.

Sol. Piously, virtuously, and ⁵ reasonably said, my friend. The gods did not, indeed, want your sacrifice; they, who give everything, can want nothing. The Athenians do want a sacrifice from you: ⁶ they

⁵ Reasonably said. See the note on "Did they need" just above.

⁶ They have an urgent. Cf. Plato, de Rep. 566 E, Ἴν' ἐν χρεῖα ἡγεμόνος ὁ δῆμος ᾗ: or Herod. i. 41, Φύλακα παιδὸς σε τοῦ ἐμοῦ χρητίζω γενέσθαι.

You have always been happier, you confess, in giving to the gods what you could have yourself used in your own house : believe me, you will not be less so in giving back to your fellow-citizens what you have taken out of theirs, and what you very well know ² they will seize when they can, together with your property and life.

³ The accusation was then directed against the other generals. Two of them made their escape ; Theramenes and Thrasybulus were acquitted ; and the remainder were brought to trial and condemned. On that occasion Socrates, ⁴ who was then a member of the council, ⁵ was bold enough to speak against so severe a judgment, ⁶ and exerted himself to save the unfortunate men, but in vain. In order to obtain their acquittal, it was proposed to judge them ⁷ one ⁵At daybreak the assault was renewed. The efforts of the assailants were again directed towards the ditch, which was now ⁶partly filled with arms and corpses: but apparently not so much with a view to cross it, ⁷as to divert the attention of the besieged, while Pyrrhus made an attempt to force an entrance at another point. Having been repulsed through this accident, he gave orders to put a stop to the assault: perhaps because he had been too much hurt by his fall to conduct it in person: but he also expected that the besieged, who seemed reduced by losses and wounds to the last stage of weakness, ²would shortly offer terms of surrender. ³But the reward of their fortitude was now at hand. Ameinias, probably the pirate, who commanded for Antigonus at Corinth, made his appearance with a body of mercenaries, accompanied, perhaps, by some Argive auxiliaries, and soon after Areus arrived with two thousand men from Crete. The Messenians too, though they had been willing, as we saw, to treat with Pyrrhus, ⁴sent succours, unsolicited, to their old enemy. The ramparts were now so well manned, that the old men and the women ⁵who had bravely exposed themselves in the most dangerous situations, while they supplied their warriors with weapons and food, might return to their homes.—THIRLWALL'S Greece, Vol. viii. p. 73.

¹ We know very little about the details of the war ; but it appears that the enemies pressed into Asia Minor from all sides. ² The decisive battle was fought near Ipsus in Phrygia ; it was decided especially by the admirable infantry of Lysimachus and Cassander. Seleucus had only Asiatics ; the phalanx of Ptolemy ³ was of little importance, and only his mercenaries fought bravely ; but the truth is, that in reality he had no talent as a commander. ⁴ Antigonos fell in the battle, and the defeat was so complete, that his whole empire was destroyed. Demetrius escaped with a small band to the maritime towns of Ionia, ⁵ but behaved in a praiseworthy manner. His adversaries, after their victory, ⁶ unfortunately for themselves, neglected to pursue him — they ought to have ⁷ annihilated him completely

Elis had ² openly declared in favour of Antiochus, and Messene was ³ undecided. The Romans, therefore, ordered the Eleans to join the Achæan league, and they did so. The Messenians were commanded to do the same. As Philopœmen had already compelled Sparta to join the Achæans, ⁴ they now had all Peloponnesus in their power. Elis remained in the Achæan confederacy, but Lacedæmon and Messene ⁵ bore this relation of dependence with great reluctance, especially as both countries had lost much through the Romans, while the Achæans had been benefited by their loss. ⁶ According to coins, Corone was separated from Messenia, and probably Isine likewise; the coast of Laconia was in the Achæan

Lacedæmon. ¹ On this occasion, Philopœmen did not by any means act in a manner which we can approve of. Notwithstanding the praise which is otherwise due to him, it was an act of injustice which he did not scruple to commit, because it was advantageous to his State. The fate of Sparta was exceedingly hard. Philopœmen summoned the leaders of the Lacedæmonians before his court; ² to this they yielded, having been assured by him that the accused should not be condemned without a fair trial. But when eighty of the most illustrious men appeared in the camp, the exiles fell upon them in a furious manner; some of them were strangled, and others sentenced to death. Philopœmen then entered the city, demolished the walls, ordered the mercenaries to be dismissed, restored the exiles, abolished the laws of Lycurgus, and established the Achæan constitution. ³ Under the pretext of clearing Sparta from those who had ⁴ intruded themselves as citizens, all emancipated Helots who had obtained the franchise under the Spartan tyrants were ex-

In the following night, there was, it is said, ² a violent snow-storm and a severe frost, ³ such as often occur in those mountainous districts after an earthquake. ⁴ The wounds of the Gauls, as they lay on the bare ground without protection and shelter, were supernaturally painful and burning, and the cold was so severe that many perished during the night. When the Gauls were thus already downcast in the extreme, the Greeks, sallying from Delphi, ⁵ broke the confused masses of the Gauls, and their small numbers thoroughly defeated the barbarians. The survivors commenced their retreat in the greatest distress, more especially because Acichorus had not yet arrived. The Spartan Government ⁵ had already meditated the invasion of Attica, and was therefore predisposed to take the advice of Alcibiades on that head. ⁶ But being now awakened to a sense of imminent danger, it appointed Gylippus, a son of the exiled Cleandridas, to sail to Sicily with such succours as he should be able, in concert with the Corinthians, to raise immediately, and, while the rest followed, ⁷ to

He quitted the country fifteen days after he had entered it, ⁵ the shortest stay which an invading army made there during the war. Demosthenes having been apprised of its approach, despatched two out of the five galleys which had been left with him, to Zacynthus, ⁴ to inform Eurymedon and his colleague of his danger. In the meanwhile the Spartans ⁵ prepared to overwhelm his little garrison by attacking the fort at once on the sea and the land side, and if they should not immediately carry it, designed to take precautions for excluding the Athenian fleet, when it came from the harbour, by a bar of galleys placed at each entrance. ¹ But, spiritless himself, he was incapable of infusing spirit. The Parthians continued throughout the day to harass the Roman army by a repetition of their usual manoeuvres. ² It was not till nightfall that they allowed them any respite. ³ Not being accustomed to construct camps, they never passed the night in the immediate neighbourhood of an enemy, but retired to a distance, ⁴ leaving the Romans to make what use they could of the few hours which would intervene before their reappearance. Crassus himself, ⁵ overwhelmed with grief and mortification, ⁶ if not with fear, was incapable of suggesting any counsel or adopting any resolution. Compelled to leave behind them the wounded, these unfortunate victims, hopeless of receiving quarter, ¹ uttered such piercing shrieks as reached the ears of the Parthian spies, who guessed the cause and reported it. Immediately the horsemen sprang to their saddles, and speedily overtook the retiring legions. ² But it would seem that their horses, after a long day's service, were unable to keep pace with the headlong rush of desperate men. News of the disaster was speedily conveyed to Charræ, and ³ the Roman garrison which was there stationed issued forth to succour and rescue the remnant of the flying army, which it conducted to an asylum of rest and safety. The Parthians contented themselves with the plunder of the camp and slaughter of the wounded, together with all the stragglers they could intercept, to the number of several thousands.—MERIVALE'S Roman History, Vol. i. p. 525.

the relief of Plataea. The brave garrison had ¹ begun to suffer from the failure of provisions; and, ² as their condition grew hopeless, two of their leading men, Theænetus, ³ a soothsayer, and Eupompidas, one of the generals, conceived the project of escaping across the enemy's lines. When it was first proposed, it was unanimously adopted; ⁴ but as the time for its execution approached, half of the men ⁵ shrank from the danger, and not more than 220 adhered to their resolution. ⁶ The contrivers of the plan took the lead in the enterprise. ⁷ Scaling ladders of a proper height were the first requisites; and they were made upon a measurement of the enemy's wall, for which the besieged had no other basis than the number of layers of brick, which were sedulously counted over and over again by different persons,

¹ A dark and stormy night, in the depth of winter, was chosen for the attempt; ² it was known that in such nights the sentinels took shelter in the towers, and left the intervening battlements unguarded; ³ and it was on this practice that the success of the adventure mainly depended. ⁴ It was concerted that the part of the garrison which remained behind should make demonstrations of attacking the enemy's lines, ⁵ on the side opposite to that by which their comrades attempted to escape. And first a small party, lightly armed, the right foot bare ⁶ to give them a surer footing in the mud, keeping at such a distance from each other as to prevent their arms from clashing, crossed the ditch, and planted their ladders, unseen and unheard; ⁷ for the noise of their

The main body of the fugitives ¹now poured through the opening thus secured, applying more ladders, and knocking away the battlements: and as they gained the other side of the outer ditch, they formed upon its edge, and, with their arrows and javelins, ²protected their comrades who were crossing, from the enemy above. Last of all, and with some difficulty, ³for the ditch was deep, the water high, and covered with a thin crust of ice, the parties which occupied the towers effected their retreat; and they had scarcely crossed before the three hundred were seen coming up with lighted torches. ⁴But their lights, which discovered nothing to them, made them a mark for the missiles of the Platæans, who were thus enabled to elude their pursuit, and to move away ⁵in good order. details of the plan seem to have been concerted with admirable forethought. On the first alarm, fire signals were raised by the besiegers to convey the intelligence to Thebes. But the Platæans had provided against this danger, and showed similar signals from their own walls,¹ so as to render it impossible for the Thebans to interpret those of the enemy.

XXV.

Next came another party with short spears, their shields being carried by their comrades behind them. ² But before many had mounted, the fall of a tile, broken off from a battlement by one of the Platæans as he laid hold of it, alarmed the nearest sentinels, and presently the whole force of the besiegers was called to the walls. But no one knew what had happened, ³ and the general confusion was increased by the sally of the besieged. ⁴ All therefore remained at their posts; only a body of three hundred men, who were ⁵ always in readiness to move toward any quarter where they might be long as any of his troops kept their ground, he would not retire from the field. When, however, he saw all dispersed, he too turned his elephant to flight. ¹He was a conspicuous object, and easily overtaken; and Alexander, who had observed and admired the courage he had shown in the battle, was desirous of saving his life, and sent Taxiles to summon him to surrender. But the sight of his old enemy only roused his indignation; Taxiles ²could not gain a hearing for his message, and ³narrowly escaped a wound. Alexander, nevertheless, continued to send messengers after him, and at length, hopeless of escape, and ⁴worn with fatigue and thirst, he yielded to the persuasions of Meroes, an Indian, one of his favourites, alighted from his elephant, and, after having slaked his thirst, permitted himself to be led into the conqueror's presence.—THIRLWALL, Vol. vii. p. 22.

He that will take away extreme heat by setting the body in the extremity of cold, shall undoubtedly remove the disease, ²but together with it the diseased too. The first thing, therefore, in skilful cures is the knowledge of the part affected; the next is the evil which doth affect it; ³the last is not only of the kind but also the measure of contrary things whereby to remove it.

⁴It was very strange that ⁵upon such an accusation, maintained with so slender evidence, men that had well deserved of their country should be overthrown. But their enemies had so incensed the rascal multitude, ⁶that no one durst absolve them,

The verb θαυμάζω can take ὥς, ὅτι, or ὅπως, if a fact really occurred, and εἰ, if the fact is not positively stated to occur.

⁵ Upon such an accusation, &c. Cf. Thucyd. vi. 29, Βουλόμενοι ἐκ μείζονος διαβολῆς αὐτὸν ἀγωνίσασθαι. For the next words, "maintained, &c.," cf. ii. 41, Καὶ οὐ δὴ τοὶ ἀμάρτυρόν γε τὴν δύναμιν παρὰσχόμενοι.

left that kingdom, the short but only scene of her life in which fortune smiled upon her. While the French coast ¹ continued in sight, she intently gazed upon it; and musing ² in a thoughtful posture ³ on that height of fortune whence she had fallen, and presaging, perhaps, the disasters and calamities which embittered the remainder of her days, she sighed often, and cried out, "Farewell, France! farewell, beloved country, which I shall never more behold." ⁴ Even when the darkness of the night had hid the land from her view, she would neither retire to the cabin nor taste food; but commanding a couch to be placed on the deck, she there waited for the day with the utmost impatience. Fortune soothed her on this occasion: the galley ⁵ made but little way during the night. In a democracy, ¹ where the right of making laws resides in the people at large, ² public virtue or goodness of intention is more likely to be found than either of the other qualities of government. Popular assemblies ³ are frequently foolish in their contrivance, and weak in their execution, but generally mean to do the thing that is right and just, ⁴ and have always a degree of patriotism or public spirit. In aristocracies there is more wisdom to be found than in the other frames of government, being composed, or intended to be composed, of the most experienced citizens; ⁵ but there is less honesty than in a republic, and less strength than in a monarchy. A monarchy is, indeed, the most powerful of any; ⁶ for

During the night and on the following day, the enemy made an assault upon the city. A hospital, which was now filled with the sick and wounded, took fire, and was rapidly consumed. During this ² scene of horror, the ³ most intrepid exertions were made to rescue these helpless sufferers from the flames. No person thought of his own property or individual concerns; every one hastened thither. The women were eminently active, ⁴ regardless of the shot that fell around them, and braving the flames of the building. ⁵ It has often been remarked that the wickedness of women exceeds that of the other sex; for the same reason, when circumstances, forcing them ⁶ out of their ordinary nature, compel them to exercise many virtues, they display them in the greatest degree.

The Athenian commanders, in the meantime, ⁴ consulted both on the calamity which had befallen them and on the present general distress in the army. For they perceived that they were unsuccessful in their attempts, and that the soldiers were wearied with staying; for they were oppressed with disease from two causes, both from its being the season of the year in which men are most generally sick, and from the place in which they were encamped being marshy and unhealthy, and all other circumstances also appeared to them to be without hope. To Demosthenes, therefore, ⁵ it appeared that they ought not to remain any longer, but, as he had intended when he ventured on the enterprise against Epipolæ, now it had failed, he gave his vote for departing without delay, ¹ while the sea was yet practicable to be crossed, and they could manage to convey the army at least, ² with the fresh accession of naval force. It was also, he said, more serviceable to the State to make war against those ³ who were erecting fortresses against them in their country, than against Syracusans, whom it was no longer easy to subdue.

But these thirty, having so great power in their hands, ⁴ were more careful to hold it than to deserve it by faithful execution of that which was committed to them. Therefore, they ⁵ condemned to death such troublesome fellows as were odious to the city, though not punishable, therefore, by law; which proceeding was by all men highly approved, who considered their lewd condition, but did not, withal, bethink themselves how easy a thing it would be unto these thirty to take away the lives of innocents, by ⁶ calling them disturbers of the peace, or what

All history ³ is only the precepts of moral philosophy reduced into examples. ⁴ Moral philosophy is divided into two parts, ethics and politics; the first instructs us in our private offices of virtues, the second in those which relate to the management of the commonwealth. But though all this be old age, it is the old age of Homer; and it may be said, for the credit of these fictions, that they are beautiful dreams; or, if you will, the dreams of Jupiter himself. I spoke of the Odyssey only to show that the greatest poets, when their genius ¹wants strength and warmth for the pathetic, for the most part ²employ themselves in painting the manners. Philopoemen ² applied the rights belonging to the league in their widest sense, and was determined ³ to reconquer Messenia by force of arms. He set out against the place ⁴ with cavalry, probably to relieve Corone; but he was ⁵ taken aback by an unfortunate accident, so that he ⁶ saw no way of escaping; yet he manœuvred so skilfully, that he saved the greater part of his troops from the defile; but he himself was wounded, taken prisoner, and ⁷ put to death by the Messenians with unpardonable cruelty: he was obliged to drink the hemlock in his seventieth

The Achæans, commanded by Lycortas, ² invaded Messenia with a great force, overpowered the enemy, conquered the city, and ³ compelled Messene again to enter the confederacy. ⁴ The authors of the murder of Philopœmen were punished. Dinocrates made away with himself; and of his principal accomplices, some were put to death, and others sent into exile. The latter applied to the Romans, who commanded the Achæans ⁵ to restore the exiles to their country. This demand, indeed, greatly exasperated the Achæans, but, under their strategus, Callicrates, ⁶ they yielded without further remonstrance.

immediately preceding the Trojan war. ¹ According to all chronological combinations we must refer to this period the expedition of the Argonauts, and the undertakings of Theseus against Crete, which events happened soon ² after the dominion of the sea had been gained for that island by Minos. The general condition of Greece at this period ³ explains, in some measure, why the limit of that country began to grow too narrow, and a new theatre for the display of enterprise to be sought for. The whole of Greece previously to the Trojan war appears to have enjoyed perfect tranquillity within its own boundaries. ⁴ The limits of the small districts in which it was divided seem already to have been finally established. ⁵ We hear of no contention respecting them on the part of the princes, and Homer was able to enumerate the several possessions with precision. From this time forward, the gods cease to appear visibly among men, and to mingle in their affairs. ² The oracle and the soothsayer alone remain to give to events a tinge of the supernatural. The wonderful is now confined to the display of human powers and virtues, ³ to the heroism of an Aristomenes, the self-devotion of a Codrus. To the purely mythic age succeeds one in which truth struggles against fable, and prevails over it. ⁴ This reaches to the end of the Persian War: ⁵ its chief record is the captivating story of Herodotus. After this period, Grecian history becomes contemporary, and as credible as any history exposed to the influence of party spirit and ⁶ local prejudices.

² The oracle and, &c. Cf. Thucyd. i. 17, Ἐπράχθη τε ἀπ' αὐτῶν οὐδὲν ἔργον ἀξίολογον εἰ μὴ εἴ τι πρὸς περιόικους τοὺς αὐτῶν ἐκάστοις. Xenophon uses the phrase εἰ μὴ τι δαιμόνιον εἴη, for a divine intervention. Between these two sentences, make the proper form here: "if it had not been for, &c. . . there was nothing supernatural, &c."

³ To the heroism, &c. Turn by "such acts as Aristomenes performed or Codrus, &c." Cf. Thucyd. ii. 43, Οὐκουν καὶ τὴν πόλιν γε τῆς σφετέρας ἀρετῆς ἀξιοῦντες στερίσκειν, κάλλιστον δὲ ἔρανον αὐτῇ προίεμενοι. Or use ὑπὲρ τῆς πόλεως κίνδυνον ἀναβρίπτειν (Thucyd. iv. 85).

⁴ This reaches. See Exercise LXXI. on "More than this, &c."

⁵ Its chief record is, &c. Use ἐνυγράψω, and take the form ὁ πᾶν Περικλῆς in Xenophon, in the sense of "Pericles the famous."

There was a time ¹ when the dilatory disposition of Fabius was the salvation of the State. There came another time, even in the life of Fabius, ² when that disposition, if it had prevailed in the Roman Senate, might have ruined the affairs of Rome by preventing Scipio from carrying the war into Africa. A third instance ³ (and all his instances are worth attending to) is that of Piero Solderini, who ⁴ conducted all his affairs with gentleness and humanity. ⁵ But sterner times came. Solderini's ⁶ gentleness was out of place, and he and his country were ruined. Now comes ⁷ the great argument of Machiavelli against despotic power. "Hence," he says, "it arises that a republic has longer life, and enjoys good fortune much longer than a despotism; ⁸ since a republic can accommodate itself better than a prince can to the diversity of times, by reason of the diversity of citizens which are in it. ¹ But were the other, or at least the democratic states, in as bad a condition as Athens? ² Here we are deserted by history, which has preserved little information on the subject of judicature. ³ But though at Athens there were incidental causes partly arising from the national character, partly from the political power of that city,—for the importance of State trials increases with the importance of the State to multiply the class of lawsuits,—it by no means follows that the number was much smaller in most of the other States. Popular tribunals ⁴ are the source of political revolutions, and what States abounded in them more than the Grecian? The man of influence, always an object of envy, was the most exposed to accusation ⁵ where it was so easy to find a ground of accusation; but the man of influence ⁶ had also the greatest ³We take cunning for sinister or crooked wisdom. And certainly there is a great difference between a cunning man and a wise man, not only in point of honesty, but in point of ability. ⁴There are some that are good in canvassing and factions, that are otherwise weak men; again, ⁵it is one thing to understand persons, and another to understand matters. ⁶Such men are fitter for practice than for counsel. And they are good but ⁷in their own alley; turn them to new men, and they have lost their aim.

² Instead of, &c. Turn by ἀντὶ τοῦ, &c., and observe that the pronoun here will be in the nominative case, on the principle of ἔφη οὐκ αὐτὸς ἀλλ' ἐκείνους στρατηγεῖν.

³ We take cunning for, &c. Use Plato's usual phrase, τιθέναι εἶναι. For "crooked," cf. Plato, Gorg. 524 C, Ἦν μέλη ἢ διεστραμμένα, &c. "Wisdom" is φρόνησις, being a good development of δεινότης, while πανουργία is a bad one.

⁴ There are some that are good, &c. Compare the usual phrases δεινὸς λέγειν, διδάσκειν, and the like. For "canvassing," cf. Demosth., p. 515, "Ὅσῳ γὰρ πλείοσιν οὗτος ἠνώχληκε καὶ παρήγγελεκεν."

²More than this was not implied in democracy;
³and little less than this was required, according to the views of the philosophers, to constitute the character of a citizen, which, in the opinion of Aristotle, could not exist without a voice in the legislative assembly, and such a share in the administration of justice as was necessary to secure the responsibility of the magistrates. ⁴But this equality of rights left room for a great diversity in the modes of exercising them, which determined the real nature of a democratical constitution. The thought of delegating them to accountable representatives ¹ seems never to have occurred either to practical or speculative statesmen, except in the formation of confederacies, which rendered such an expedient necessary. ² Where all the powers of the State were lodged in a certain number of citizens, though they were elected by the whole body of the people, ³ the government was looked upon as an oligarchy; and, in fact, it seems that, in all such cases, the functions so assigned were held for life, and without any responsibility.

² To have attained the summit. Cf. Thucyd. iv. 100, Καὶ ἐσεσιδήρωτο ἐπὶ μέγα καὶ τοῦ ἔλλου ξύλου, turning it by, "seemed to have advanced to the greatest point of their power (προελθεῖν)." Or else cf. Herod. ii. 35, Αὐτὸς ἐωντοῦ βέει πολλὰ ὑποδέεστος.

cowed; ¹in no quarter of the political horizon, neither in nor out of Greece, did it seem possible for the keenest eye to discover any prognostics of danger; her empire, says the contemporary historian, appeared in every respect to have been now established on a glorious and solid base. Yet, in a few years, ²the Spartan women saw, for the first time, the smoke of the flames, with which a hostile army ravaged their country, in the immediate neighbourhood of the capital; and a Spartan embassy implored the pity of the Athenians, ³and pleaded the magnanimity with which Sparta, in her hour of victory, had preserved Athens from annihilation, as a motive for the exercise of similar generosity toward a fallen enemy.

² The Spartan women saw, for the first time. Cf. Thucyd. iv. 34, Ἐκπληξίς τε ἐνέπεσεν ἀνθρώποις δῆθ' ὅσοι τοιαύτης μάχης; and ii. 44, Ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἂν ἐθὰς γενόμενος ἀφαιρεθῇ. Turn by "saw the enemy firing, &c." "Immediate neighbourhood" is τὰ ἐν κύκλῳ, with a genitive, although Herodotus (iv. 72) puts an accusative.

³ And pleaded the magnanimity, &c. Turn this as follows: "begged them to pity them: for that having prevented, when in prosperity, Athens from being annihilated . . . they deserved to have a like return when in trouble." For "in the hour of victory," cf. Thucyd. i. 16, Καὶ ἴωσι προχωρησάντων ἐπὶ μέγα τῶν πραγμάτων. For "to have a like return," cf. Plato, Gorg. p. 520 G, Τὸν εὖ παθόντα ἐπιθυμείν ποιεῖ δὲν' εὖ ποιεῖν. Observe that ἄξιοι εἶναι here must be used, not δέξιοι εἶναι, as the subject of εἶναι is the same as that of the main verb.

I sat on the stairs, waiting, ¹in direful suspense, for the doctor to come out. ²A quarter of an hour passed, half an hour, three-quarters of an hour. I augured the worst from the long visit of the doctor. At last he came out of the sick man's room ³with a happy expression on his countenance, though a very thoughtful one. I ⁴rushed up two or three steps to meet him. "It is good news," I exclaimed. "I think we shall do it; I really do think we shall do it," he replied. ⁵"It will be one of the most useful discoveries of modern times, and will immortalise us both. ⁶But you girls do not care for these things." The Spanish character, with relation to public affairs, ²is distinguished by inordinate pride and arrogance. ⁵ "Consciousness of continual progress" is perhaps the hardest of these essential conditions to be secured; for progress in well doing, continuous, and certain, ⁶ is given to few of mortal mould, however strenuous the effort. Man is both weak and erring by nature; but He who knoweth our infirmities, and of what dust we are made, has compassion upon us; ⁷ and inasmuch as our progress to the grave is indeed

¹ Kind and warm, &c. Turn by "being treated kindly (ἐδ' ἰσχυρῶς) they love to return kindnesses (ἀντ' ἐδ' ποιεῖν)." In this passage use the plural throughout, "the Spaniards," not "the Spaniard."

² Patient under privations. Cf. Plato, Rep. p. 556 B, Μαλακοὺς δὲ καρτερεῖν πρὸς ἡδονὰς τε καὶ λύπας. For the next clause take the form ἡδονῶν, &c., ἥσσαντας εἶναι.

³ Bloody. Cf. Herod. i. 212, Ἡ μὲν σὲ ἐγὼ καὶ ἀπληστον ἐόντα αἵματος κορέσω.

⁴ Remembering insult, &c. Cf. Xen. Anab. ii. 4, 1, Μὴ μνησικαεῖν βασιλέα αὐτοῖς τῆς ἐπιστρατείας.

⁵ Consciousness of continual. Turn by "to be aware of one's advancing (ξυνειδέναι ἑαυτῷ) . . . is perhaps the hardest of those things which must be secured to begin with (ὑπάρχειν)."

⁶ Is given to few. Turn by ὀλίγων ἀνθρώπων ἐστί; and cf. Thucyd. vi. 56, Εἰ καὶ ὁποιοῦν τολμήσειαν, for the next words.

continuous, without rest or pause, a means of salvation has been provided, requiring only honest and unceasing effort, the loving heart, the faithful spirit; and one who is able, ¹ bridges over the chasm between effort and success. We may with such aid always have this consciousness of progress then; because it rests with us, and it is always in our power to make unceasing and true-hearted effort, ² and this is the condition of progress towards the desired end; the reward of the servant with two talents, as of him with ten! ³ Let us cease, then, to bewail either the monotony of life or its blank and aimless character. Those who utter such complaints must not only have failed to discover its proper use, but missed the true interpretation of the great law which lifts the burden ⁴ and unfolds the mystery of life.—Life's Problems, p. 72.

LXXXVI.

⁵ The only view under which our subject will permit us to consider colonization is in its tendency to augment the population of the parent State.

¹ Bridges over the chasm. Use τὸ ἐν μέσῳ τοῦ τε προθυμείσθαι, &c., γινόμενον.

² And this is the condition, &c. Turn by "and he who supplies these requisites, &c." (παρέχουσιν).

³ Let us cease, then. Turn by "let us cease crying down life, as always busy about the same things, and having nothing to aim at"

(ἐπιτυγχάνειν). Cf. LXXXVII. note 3.

⁴ And unfolds the mystery, &c. Turn by "discloses what life really is," and observe the usual Greek position for "life" will be in the first clause, like οὐδὲν σε τίς εἶ.

⁵ The only view under which, &c. Use μέθοδος, for "subject," and cf. Plato, Phædo, p. 96 D.

¹ Suppose a fertile, but empty, island to be ² within the reach of a country in which arts and manufactures are already established; suppose a colony sent out from such a country to take possession of the island, ³ and to live there under the protection and authority of their native government, the new settlers will naturally convert their labour to the cultivation of the vacant soil, ⁴ and with the produce of that soil will draw a supply of manufactures from home. Whilst the inhabitants continue few, and lands cheap and fresh, the colonists will find it easier and more profitable to raise corn or rear cattle, and with corn and cattle ⁵ to purchase woollen cloth, for instance, or linen, than to spin or weave these articles for themselves. The mother country, meanwhile, derives from this connexion ⁶ an increase both of provision and employment.—PALEY'S Moral Philosophy, Bk. vi. c. 11.

² He was in company with, &c. Use ἔνεσθαι with a dative, but also observe a varied construction less common, Μετὰ δὲ νέων ἀεὶ ἔνεστί τε καὶ ἔστιν (Plato, Symp. 195 B). Συνακολουθεῖν is also used in the same way (Isocr. Panegy. 40).

³ Inveighing against, &c. Cf. Thucyd. i. 67, Κατεβόων ὅτι σπονδὰς τε λελυκότες εἰεν καὶ ἀδικοῖεν τὴν Πελοπόννησον.

⁴ He quite chimed in, &c. Συμφωνῶ is used by Plato frequently in this sense.

⁵ All is vanity, &c. Cf. Demosth. p. 23, Καὶ ἐν οὐδενὸς εἶναι μέρει τὸν τοιοῦτον.

⁶ And then he paused, &c. Cf. Thucyd. v. 10, Οὐ πολὺ δὲ διαλιπὼν ἐτελεύτησε.

⁷ Devoted to charitable, &c. Turn by "Of his fellow-citizens, for one man he benefited many in many ways" (πολλὰ πλειστούς).

⁸ But probably he was, &c. Turn by "but I fancy, since he was not very strong, through being given up to study, he found himself, &c." For "I fancy," ὥς ἐμοὶ δοκεῖ, ὥς ἐμοὶ δοκεῖν, τό γε δοκοῦν ἐμοί, are used.

⁹ Immense gain, &c. Cf. Thucyd. vii. 56, Τοῦ ναυτικοῦ μέγα μέρος προκόψαντες, where τοῦ ναυτικοῦ seems to be the genitive after προκόψαντες. Xenophon has a different con-work to ride sometimes in a carriage. So, when he was denouncing the pomps and vanities of the world, ¹an honest, sudden thought compelled him to make this exception. But it has a very droll sound. "All! all is vanity, except a carriage." I quite agree with him; ²so, when I put down my brougham—that little box upon wheels in which I have done a good deal of work of one kind or another—³you will know that it is sheer, undoubted, unmitigated poverty. You will not be taken in by my saying that a carriage is a nuisance; that a horse is always falling ill or getting into some trouble.—Friends in Council, Vol. II. p. 166.

² So, when I put down, &c. Turn by "when I cease riding in, &c." (κομίζεσθαι). Just below for "of one sort or another," use ὁποιονδηποῦν, or the like.

⁴ Many more than it can, &c. Take the common form, μείζω ἢ κατὰ δάκρυα (Thucyd. vii. 75).

They who, by the ¹rules of partition (and some such must be established in every country), are entitled to the land; and they who, by their labour upon the soil, ²acquire a right in its produce, will not ³part with their property for nothing; or, rather, ⁴they will no longer raise from the soil ⁵what they can neither use themselves, nor exchange for what they want. Or lastly, if these were ⁶willing to distribute what they could spare of the provision which the ground yielded, to others who had no share or concern in the property or cultivation of it, yet still the most enormous mischiefs would ensue from great numbers remaining unemployed. The idleness of one half of the community would overwhelm the whole with confusion and disorder.⁷ One only way presents itself of removing the difficulty which this question states, and which is simply this: that they whose work is not wanted, nor can be employed, in the raising of provision out of the ground, convert their hands and ingenuity ¹to the fabrication of articles which may gratify and requite those who are so employed, or who, by the division of lands in the country, ²are entitled to the exclusive possession of certain parts of them. ³By this contrivance all things proceed well. The occupier of the ground raises from it the utmost that he can procure, because he is repaid for what he can spare by something else which he wants, or with which he is pleased: the artist or manufacturer, ⁴though he have neither any property in the soil, nor any concern in its cultivation, is regularly supplied with the produce, because he gives, in exchange for what he stands in need of, something ⁵upon which the receiver places an equal value; and ⁶the community is kept quiet, while both sides are engaged in their respective occupations.—PALEY'S Moral Philosophy, Bk. vi. c. 11.

⁴ They will no longer raise. Cf. Thucyd. i. 5, Οἷς τε ἐπιμελὲς εἶη εἰδέναι οὐκ ὀνειδίζοντων.

⁵ What they can neither use. Cf. Arist. N. Eth. v. 5, 13, Δηλοῖ ὅτι ὅταν μὴ ἐν χρεῖᾳ ᾖσιν ἀλλήλων οὐκ ἀλλάττονται. For the construction of ἀλλάττεσθαι, cf. Thucyd. viii. 82, Τὴν τε παραντίκα ἐλπίδα ἕκαστος τῆς τε σωτηρίας καὶ &c., οὐδενὸς ἀν' ἡλλάξαντο.

In the first place the man who wishes for self-advancement must be industrious. ¹This seems a common-place remark, but is not so. It is imagined, ²for instance, that any clever man can ³get up a subject very quickly. ⁴This is all a delusion, and ⁵we lawyers are the people who have especially deluded mankind in this matter. They see us crammed, as they suppose, overnight, or ⁶early in the morning, ⁷before going into court, with the details of a subject, and they suppose that a similar thing can be done in any other department of human life ; but they forget that a law case when it comes on for adjudication is often a very limited and narrow affair ; and they also forget that these details, which

As the government ²was now effectually converted into a military usurpation, it became easy to simplify its operations; and most of the persons formerly ³employed in civil departments were ⁴dismissed from office. Some were at once turned off; ⁵others had documents given them entitling them to be reinstated upon vacancies; a few had some trifling pension promised. All who depended for employment and subsistence upon foreign trades were now destitute. Whole families were thus suddenly reduced to poverty and actual want. Their trinkets went first; whatever was saleable followed: things offered for sale at such a time ⁶were sold at

³ Emigration may be either the overflowing of a country, or the desertion. ⁴ As the increase of the species is indefinite, and the number of inhabitants which any given tract or surface can support, finite: it is evident that great numbers may be constantly leaving a country, and yet the country remain constantly full. Or, whatever be the cause ⁵ which invincibly limits the population of a country; when the number of the people has arrived at that limit, ⁶ the progress of generation, beside continuing the succession, will supply multitudes for foreign emi-

In these two cases emigration ¹ neither indicates any political decay, nor in truth diminishes the number of the people; nor ought to be prohibited or discouraged. ² But emigrants may relinquish their country ³ from a sense of insecurity, oppression, annoyance, and inconveniency. Neither, again, here is it emigration which wastes the people, but the evils that occasion it. ¹ It would not be easy to persuade us of the cowardice of a soldier of fortune, who acquired and preserved the esteem of the legions, ² as well as the favour of so many warlike princes. ³ Yet even calumny is sagacious enough to discover and to attack the most vulnerable part. Like Augustus, Diocletian may be considered as the ⁶ founder of a new empire. Like the ¹ Were useful rather than splendid. Observe the double comparative usual in such sentences as this. Cf. Thucyd. iii. 42, Ἀξυνετώτερος ἂν δόξας εἶναι ἢ ἀδικιώτερος ἀπεχώρει. There is, of course, the other form, Ἀγαθὸς μᾶλλον ἢ πλοῦσιος.

² A vigorous mind, improved, &c. For this sentence cf. Thucyd. i. 138, Οἰκεία γὰρ ξυνέσει καὶ οὕτε προμαθὼν ἐς αὐτὴν οὐδὲν οὐτε ἐπιμαθὼν, &c., turning it as follows: "being naturally clever, by intercourse with men, he was always learning more, &c. . . . using dexterity . . . and moreover mixed between liberality, &c. . . . and sometimes pardoning, sometimes, if necessary, punishing."

³ Profound dissimulation, &c. Make this the beginning of a new sentence. "To dissimulate was natural (ξύνηθές τι ἔχειν), assuming a soldierly frankness." Cf. Herod. ii. 121, Τὸν δὲ διαλοιδόρεσθαι πᾶσι ὄργην προσποιούμενος.

⁴ Steadiness to pursue, &c. Turn this sentence, in continuation of the last, by participles: "being steady (βέβαιος) to accomplish his ends, and using various ways with versatility." Cf. Thucyd. i. 70, Ὅξεῖς καὶ ἐπιτελέσθαι ἔργῳ ὃ ἂν γνῶσιν, and ii. 41, Ἐπὶ πλείστ' ἂν εἶδη καὶ μάλιστα εὐτραπέλως τὸ σῶμα αὐταρκὲς παρέχεσθαι.

⁵ And of colouring, &c. Turn by "attaching to this ambition the specious name of justice, &c." Cf. Plato, Rep. p. 495 C, Ἄλλοι ἐπεισελθόντες ὀνείδη περιήψαν, and imitate the phrases ὄνομα τῆς εὐγενείας, &c.

²But this is not all. For ³we find within ourselves a will, and are conscious of a character. Now if this, in us, be reconcilable with fate, it is reconcilable with it in the Author of Nature. And besides, natural government and final causes ⁴imply a character and a will in the Governor and Designer ; a will concerning the creatures whom He governs. The Author of Nature, then, being certainly of some character or other ⁵notwithstanding necessity, Turn "distinguished, &c." by τὰ πολιτικά μᾶλλον εὐδόκιμος, &c.

² But this is not all. Use ἀλλ' οὐδὲ τοῦτο οὕτως ἀρκούντως ἔχει.

³ We find within ourselves a will, &c. Turn by "we are conscious of a will existing in us, and of ourselves being of a certain character;" and vary the construction in the two clauses, συνειδέναι ἐμῶν ὧν and ὅντι being both found. "Will" is προαίρεσις. Cf. Aristotle's Nic. Ethics, iii. 2. "To be of a certain character" is ποῖός τις εἶναι, Plato's Repub. iv. passim. The Platonic word for "Author of Nature" or "Creator" is δημιουργός.

⁵ Notwithstanding necessity. Turn by "although necessity exists, not the less does, &c." Observe that καίπερ only goes with a participle.

¹it is evident this necessity is as reconcilable with the particular character of benevolence, veracity, and justice in Him, which attributes are the foundation of religion, as with any other character: since we find this necessity no more hinders men from being benevolent than cruel; true, than faithless; just, than unjust; or if ²the fatalist pleases, what we call unjust. For it is said, indeed, that what, ³upon supposition of freedom, would be just punishment, upon supposition of necessity becomes manifestly unjust, ⁴because it is punishment inflicted for doing that which persons could not avoid doing. As if necessity, which is supposed to destroy the injustice of murder, for instance, would not also destroy the injustice of punishing it.—BUTLER.

¹ It is evident this necessity is as reconcilable. Turn by "it is evident that this necessity not one whit more prevents the particular character from existing in him than, &c." Use ἡ τοιούδε ἔστις, and ἔστις ὅποιαν τισοῦν (Xenoph. Cyrop. ii. 4, 10).

² The fatalist. Turn this either by ὁ πάντα ἀνάγκη τινὶ ἀπονέμω, or simply ὁ ἀναγκάζων, after the analogy of ὁ ψνίζων in Aristoph. Equit. 523, in the sense of one who writes a play about gall insects.

³ Upon supposition of freedom. Turn by τοῦ ἐκουσίου τεθειμένου, or ὑπολαμβανομένου.

⁴ Because it is punishment, &c. Turn by "for they would be punished who act involuntarily." For the next clause use the genitive absolute with ὥσπερ οὐκ ἔν, or the accusative. Cf. Xen. Mem. ii. 3, 3, τῶν δὲ ἀδελφῶν ἀμελοῦσιν ὥσπερ ἐκ πολιτῶν μὲν γιγνομένους φίλους ἐξ ἀδελφῶν δὲ οὐ γιγνομένους.

¹Which how a people ²and their leaders especially can do, who have fought so gloriously for liberty; ³how they can change their noble words and actions, heretofore so becoming the majesty of a free people, into the base necessity of court flatteries and prostrations, is not only strange and admirable, but ⁴lamentable to think on. That a nation should be so valorous and courageous to win their liberty in the field, and, when they have won it, ⁵should be so heartless and unwise in their counsels, as not to know how to use it, value it, what to do with it or with themselves; but, after ten or twelve years' prosperous war and ⁶contestation with tyranny, ⁷basely

² And their leaders especially. Cf. Herod. i. 1, Γυναικας ἑλλας τε πολλὰς καὶ δὴ καὶ τοῦ βασιλέος θυγατέρας.

³ How they can change, &c. Turn thus: "and change whatever distinction they gained in word, &c. . . into flatteries, &c. . . such as king-governed people are forced to render." Cf. Thucyd. i. 18, Οἱ ἐκ τῆς ἑλλας Ἑλλάδος ἐπὶ πολὺ καὶ πρὶν τυραννευθείσης, and Plato, Phædr. p. 242 A, Πρὶν ὑπὸ σοῦ τι μείζον ἀναγκασθῆναι. For "prostrations," use Plato's word ἅλσις.

⁴ Lamentable to think on. Cf. Demosth. p. 23, Ταῦτα δείγματα τῆς ἐκείνου γνώμης ἐστὶ τοῖς ἐν φρονούσι.

⁵ Should be so heartless, &c. Turn as follows: "and having won it, through cowardice, &c. . . being ignorant how they must preserve it by duly valuing it, not even to know what, &c." Cf. Thucyd. i. 9, Δύναμιν περιποιησάμενον τὴν ἐπανυμίαν, &c. Also Herod. vii. 213, Ἀπορέοντος δὲ βασιλέος ὅτι χρῆσται τῷ παρεόντι πρήγματι.

⁶ Contestation with tyranny. Cf. Thucyd. ii. 49, Ἄλλ' ἀντείχε παρὰ δόξαν τῇ τालαιπωρίᾳ.

⁷ Basely and besottledly, &c. Turn by "having once shaken off . . . again to put it on and besottedly to run their necks again into the yoke which they have broken, and ¹prostrate all the fruits of their victory for nought at the feet of the vanquished, ²besides our loss of glory, ³and such an example as kings or tyrants ⁴never yet had the like to boast of, will be an ignominy, if it befall us, that never yet befell any nation possessed of their liberty; ⁵worthy indeed themselves, whatsoever they be, to be for ever slaves, but that part of the nation ⁶which consents not with them, as I persuade me of a great number, ⁷far worthier than by their means to be brought into the same bondage.

themselves." Cf. Herod. vii. 8, Ἐξουσι δούλιον ζυγόν. "Shaking off" may be turned by Ἀποσειώ in the middle; as in Plato, Gorg. p. 484 A, Πάντα ταῦτα ἀποσεισάμενος, &c.

² Besides our loss of glory, &c. Turn as follows: "By this, together with the disgrace, &c. . . we shall gain such ignominy."

³ And such an example as, &c. This will fit into the construction, just begun, by means of σύν, and the infinitive used like a substantive, "the setting such an example as, &c."

⁴ Never yet had the like to boast of. Use the form μεγάλα φρονεῖν ἐπὶ τι, or cf. Plato, Rep. 405 B, Ἐπ' αὐτῷ δὴ τούτῳ καλλωπίσθαι.

⁵ Worthy indeed themselves, &c. If the first part of the sentence be turned "we shall gain such ignominy as no city . . . ever yet did," then "worthy themselves" can be either αὐτῇ μὲν ἀξία, &c., agreeing with πόλις, or αὐτοὶ μὲν, &c., can be used as referring to πολῖται, implied in πόλις: the second clause, "but that part," &c. must, of course, be in the genitive, as not agreeing with the subject of the verb in the last sentence. Cf. Demosth. p. 14, Ἀπεβλέψατε ὡς αὐτὸς μὲν οὐ ποιήσων, τὸν δὲ πλησίον πράξοντα.

⁶ Which consents not with them. Cf. Herod. i. 60, Μετὰ δὲ οὐ πολλὸν χρόνον τωτὶδ' φρονήσαντες.

⁷ Far worthier, &c. Notice the two forms φύσις ἀσθενεστέρα ἢ λαβεῖν, and ἐλάττω δύναμιν ἔχοντα ἢ ὥστε τοὺς φίλους ὠφελεῖν.

¹You have often heard me speak of my warfare with the Nymphs, ²who reign at the foot of the rocks, ³that lose themselves in the clouds. It is from these that the Sorgues, ⁴transparent as crystal, rolls over its emerald bed; and by its bank I cultivate a little sterile and stony spot, which I have destined to the Muses; but ⁵the jealous Nymphs dispute the possession of it with me. They destroy in the spring the labours of my summer. I had conquered from them a little meadow, and had not enjoyed it long, when, upon my ⁶return from a journey into Italy, I found that I had been robbed of all my possessions. ⁷But I was not to be discouraged. I collected the labourers, the fishermen, and the shepherds, and raised a rampart against the Nymphs. ¹ You have often heard, &c. Use the common form ἀκούειν τινος λέγοντος.

³ That lose themselves, &c. Turn by "covered as to their peaks with clouds." Use νέφος as a commoner prose word than νεφέλη.

⁴ Transparent as crystal, &c. Cf. Plato, Phædr. p. 229 B, Καθὰ καὶ διαφανῇ τὰ ὕδατια φαίνεται.

⁵ The jealous Nymphs. Cf. Theocr. xv. 23, Χρῆμα καλόν τι, of a person, a form which might, I think, be used here in apposition to nymphs. Ἀμφισβητεῖν takes a genitive with or without περί, of the subject of dispute, and πρὸς τινα of the person.

⁶ Return from a journey. Use ἡ ἐς . . . ἀποδημία.

⁷ But I was not to be discouraged. Cf. Thucyd. i. 82, Καὶ μὴ ἐς ἀπόνειαν καταστήσαντας.

⁸ It is in vain to battle.

with my little garden, and my narrow dwelling. I want nothing, and look for no favours from fortune. If you come to me, you will see a solitary, who wanders in the meadows, the fields, the forests, and the mountains, resting in the mossy grottos, or ¹beneath the shady trees. I detest the ²intrigues of courts, the tumult of cities, and fly the abodes of pageantry and pride. ³Equally removed from joy or sadness, I pass my days in the most profound calm, ⁴happy to have the Muses for my companions, and the songs of birds and the murmur of streams for my serenade.—Translation from Petrarch's Letters.

XCVIII.

(CIVIL SERVICE (INDIA). 1861.)

The service, therefore, rendered by Voltaire ⁵in purging history of these foolish conceits is, not that he was the first by whom they were attacked, but that he was the first to ⁶attack them with success:

Cf. Trach. 492, Θεοῖσι δυσμαχοῦντες, and use τὰ τῆς φύσεως and παθόντα γινώναι.

¹ Beneath the shady trees. Cf. Thucyd. ii. 75, τοῖς δένδροισιν, this being the usual form even in prose, rather than δένδροις.

² Intrigues of courts. Use ὅσα οἱ περὶ τὰς αὐλὰς κατασκευάζουσι.

³ Equally removed from, &c. Use δι' ἴσου ἀπέχειν, with or without ἀπό.

⁴ Happy to have, &c. Turn by "gladly (ἀσμένως μὲν) associating with the Muses, and gladly," &c.

⁵ In purging history. Plato uses Ἐκκαθαίρω, with an accusative, in the sense of clearing away, getting rid of anything. Turn the first sentence here in some such way as this: "Voltaire is worthy of praise, not only because, &c." For "to attack," cf. Thucyd. ii. 62, ἵεναι δὲ τοῖς ἐχθροῖς δμόσε.

⁶ Attack them with success. Use Εὖ ἀπαλλάσσειν προσβάλλοντα.

and this, because he was also the first who ¹mingled ridicule with argument; thus not only assailing the system, but also ²weakening the authority of those by whom the system was supported. ³His irony, his wit, his pungent and telling sarcasms, ⁴produced more effect than the gravest arguments could have done; ⁵and there can be no doubt that he was fully justified in using those great resources with which nature had endowed him, ⁶since by their aid he advanced the interest of truth, and relieved men from some of their most inveterate prejudices. ⁷It is not, however, to be supposed, that ridicule was the only means employed by Voltaire in effecting this important object. ⁸So far from that, I can say with

² Weakening the authority, &c. Cf. Demosth. p. 406, Τοῦτο παραιρεῖται τὴν θρασύτητα τὴν τούτων.

³ His irony, &c. Turn this by "his irony, and what jests he uttered (σκάπτω), wittily, but sharply, &c."

⁴ Produced more effect. Turn by "were so strong, as not even the most seriously-formed arguments (σπουδάω) would have been." In the last clause, ἄν will be inserted without the verb, as in Arist. Nub. 5, Οἱ δ' οἰκέται βέγκουσιν ἀλλ' οὐκ ἂν πρὸ τοῦ.

⁵ And there can be no doubt. Turn by "and no one would doubt that he was right, &c.," using ἀμφισβητεῖν μὴ δίκαιον εἶναι, with an infinitive following.

⁶ Since by their aid, &c. Connect this with the last sentence by ἔλλως τε καί, and turn the words "relieved men, &c.," by "refuting some things held as opinions (δοξάζω) by men for a very long time wrongly."

⁷ It is not, however, &c. Use οὐ μὴν ἀλλὰ, a phrase qualifying or correcting what has been previously said, as οὐ μὴν ἀλλὰ καίπερ τούτων οὕτως ἐχόντων ἔστιν ἢ παρακινδυνεύσειεν, &c.

⁸ So far from that, &c. Turn confidence, after a careful comparison of both writers, that 'the most decisive arguments advanced by Niebuhr against the early history of Rome had all been anticipated by Voltaire, 'in whose works they may be found, by whoever will take the trouble of reading what this great man has written, instead of ignorantly railing against him.—History of Civilization in England. H. T. BUCKLE.

XCIX.

(INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATION. 1861.)

³ Let any part of this corporeal mass be refined by the subtlest division, let it be agitated by the quickest motion, let it be modelled into what shape or fashion you please, how can any man imagine

this by "very far from it; for having myself examined, &c. . . . I know that if Niebuhr raised any doubt . . . this Voltaire anticipated." Cf. Demosth. p. 326, Οὐδὲ γ' ἡττήθην . . . πολλοῦ γε καὶ δεῖ, and Thucyd. vi. 33, Πείθων γε ἐμάντων σαφέστερόν τι ἑτέρου εἰδῶς λέγειν.

¹ The most decisive arguments, &c. Cf. Aristotle, Eth. i. 10, Μαρτυρεῖ δὲ τῷ λόγῳ καὶ τὸ νῦν διαπορηθέν: turning the sentence, "if any question was raised, &c."

² In whose works, &c. Turn by "and he who wishes to examine himself the writings . . . will find all these things in them" (ἐνόντα εὐρήσει). Observe that after μάλλον ἢ, it is not unusual to have an extra οὐ, as Thucyd. iii. 36, 'Ὁμῶν τὸ βούλευμα πόλιν ὅλην διαφθεῖραι μάλλον ἢ οὐ τοὺς αἰτίους. See Arnold's note on Thucyd. ii. 62.

³ Let any part, &c. Turn this as follows: "Of this matter (ὅλην), if any one, after dividing any part you please, . . . then agitates, &c. . . . how is it not ridiculous to think that, &c." "Any part you please;" such forms are rendered in Greek by adding οὖν, or δήποτε, or δημοτοῦν, or τιοῦν; as κἄν ὅπως οὖν καταβεβλημένα, utcumque disjecta fuerint; and ἐνιοι τὰ μὲν φιλονεκία, τὰ δὲ ἥτινιδήποτε αἰτία προάγονται λέγειν. Observe that εἴτα is often used with the finite verb, after a participle. Cf. Soph. Aj. 468, Εὐμπεσῶν μόνος εἴτα λολισθὼν θάνω.

either knowledge, or appetite, or passion thence to result? or that it should thence acquire a power of moving itself, or another ¹adjacent body? Even, I say, ²this inferior locomotive faculty is too high for matter, by any change it can undergo, to obtain, for we, ³as inward experience or conscious of what we do may teach us, determine ourselves commonly to action, and move the corporeal instruments ⁴subject to our will and command, ⁵not by force of any precedent, bodily impression, or impulse, but either according to mere pleasure, or in virtue of ⁶somewhat spiritual and abstracted from matter acting upon us, not by a physical energy, but by moral representation, ⁷in a manner more easily conceived than expressed; for no man surely is so dull, that he cannot perceive a huge difference between being dragged by a violent hand, and drawn to action by a strong reason, although it may puzzle him to δαιαν ἐλὼν καὶ δυνηθεὶς ἂν αὐτὸς ἔχειν; but the future participle probably does not take ἂν.

³ As inward experience, &c. Turn by "as is clear either by natural (οἰκείος) thought, or from what we know ourselves (σύνισμεν αὐτοῖς) able possibly to do, &c." In this sense the participle can take ἂν. Cf. Demostl. p. 23, Φίλιππος Ποτί-

⁴ Subject to our will, &c. Cf. Thucyd. iv. 20, Ἡς νῦν ὑμεῖς κύριοι ἐστέ.

⁵ Not by force of any precedent, &c. Turn this by "any power existing previously in our bodies." Cf. Thucyd. iv. 126, Σαφῶς τε πᾶν τὸ προὔπαρχον.

⁶ Somewhat spiritual, &c. Use τὸ σωματοειδές, and ἀφορρίζομαι.

⁷ In a manner, &c. Turn by "but how it works one would more easily conceive oneself, than explain to others."

express that difference. ¹Such a proposition of truth, such an apprehension of events possible, such an appearance of good or evil consequent, things nowhere existent without us, nor having in them anything of corporeal subsistence, nor therefore capable of corporeal operation, all are the engines that usually impel us to action.—BARROW.

C.

But ²I do not rest my case upon that ground, but upon the broad principle that it is the right of a belligerent to intercept and cripple the commerce of an enemy. The most powerful belligerent ³would, of course, reap the greatest advantage from this principle. I do not deny the possibility of England suffering more in her commerce than other nations of the world, but the real advantage would lie with the nation who could bring the strongest force against the enemy; ⁴and there can be no question that, so long as we have the preponderance at sea,

¹ Such a proposition, &c. Turn by "to grasp at truth, and understand the things possible (τὰ ἐνδεχόμενα) to happen, &c. . . . neither being in us (προϋπάρχειν), nor sharing the corporeal, so as to, &c."

² I do not rest my case, &c. Cf. Thucyd. iii. 44, Καὶ τοῦτο δὲ μάλιστα Κλέων ἰσχυρίζεται, and then go on, "but rather that it is right, &c.," and notice the usual construction, δίκαιοι ἔστε υἱεὶς ἰέναι (Herod. ix. 60).

³ Would, of course, &c. Cf. Thucyd. iv. 10, Καὶ τὰ πλείω ὁρῶ πρὸς ἡμῶν ὄντα. For "of course," when an assertion beyond the possibility of cavil is made, cf. Demosth. p. 545, Ἐστάναι γὰρ ἐξέσται δῆπουθεν αὐτῷ.

⁴ And there can be no question, &c. Turn by "and this, at least, if we remain masters of the sea, will be in our favour." Cf. Thucyd. ii. 87, Περιγίγνεται δὲ ὑμῖν πλήθος τε νεῶν καὶ, &c.

the advantage will lie with us. ¹I should be sorry to see any principle enunciated, still less affirmed, by that House, which might lead the rest of Europe to suppose that, ²whatever the government might do, the people of England had resolved ³that the capture of merchandise at sea should no longer be effected by our vessels of war. ⁴Even the discussion of such a question should be approached with caution and reserve, for the principle thus enunciated might be accepted by other nations ⁵at a time for us most inconvenient. The motives of the gentleman who brought forward the subject are worthy of all praise. ⁶No one could deny the evils which war inflicted upon society—evils not only of bloodshed, but of loss and distress upon the nations; but I believe that ⁷the way to protect the interests of humanity, and to ¹ I should be sorry to see. Turn by "it is not right, in my opinion, that such a thing should even be hinted at as possible, much less affirmed, by any word." Cf. Thucyd. i. 122, "Ὁ καὶ λόγῳ ἐνδοιασθῆναι αἰσχρόν." For "still less," cf. Thucyd. i. 142, Χαλεπὸν γὰρ καὶ ἐν εἰρήνῃ πόλιν ἀντίπαλον παρασκευάσασθαι, ἥ που δὴ ἐν πολέμῳ, &c.

² Whatever the government. See Ex. LXXIX.

³ That the capture of merchandise, &c. Turn by "the people will not permit their ships of war, if they fall in with any merchant-ships, to see them." Cf. Thucyd. viii. Τὰς ὀγκάδας προσβαλλούξυλλαμβάνειν. Use Περι-τυγχάνειν, for "to fall in with."

⁴ Even the discussion, &c. Turn by "nor ought those who discuss . . . to speak too boldly" (ἀγαν παρρησιάζεσθαι).

⁵ At a time for us most, &c. Use Παρὰ καιρὸν, or ὅπου μὴ δεῖ.

⁶ No one could deny, &c. Turn by "for who would not admit that war . . . not only causes bloodshed, &c." Cf. Thucyd. iii. 81, Πᾶσά τε ἰδέα κατέστη θανάτου, and ii. 51, Καὶ τὸν πλείστον φόβον τοῦτο ἐνεποιεῖ.

⁷ The way to protect, &c. Turn by "but I think, if any one having an eye to . . . is anxious that war . . . he must, fighting as hard as he can (κατὰ τὸ δυνατόν), come to terms as shortly as possible."

make war as little burdensome as possible, is to make it short and sharp. We should be slow to enter into a contest, but when once that contest is begun, ¹it is too late to speak of humanity in this sense, ²whilst to neglect every possible means to bring it to a speedy and successful termination would be, not only weakness, but treachery.—Parliamentary Debates, March, 1862.

Cf. Herod. i. 91, Προθυμομένου δὲ ὅπως ἂν γένοιτο τὸ πάθος.

Cf. Plato, Repub. p. 408 E, Οὐ γὰρ ἂν αὐτὰ ἐνεχώρει κακὰ εἶναι.

Turn by "but not to be eager to end . . . this would be, I do not say . . . but actual treachery." Cf. Thucyd. i. 82, Πόλεμον δὲ . . . οὐ ῥάδιον εὐπρεπῶς θέσθαι, and i. 122, Οὐκ ἄλλο τι φέρουσιν ἢ ἀντικρυς δουλείαν.

Geometry and Euclid.

ALDIS (T. S.) Text Book of Geometry. By T. S. Aldis, M. A., Trinity College, Cambridge. Small 8vo. 4s. 6d. Part I.—Angles—Parallels—Triangles—Equivalent Figures—Circles. 2s. 6d. Part II. Proportion. Just published. 2s. Sold separately.

The object of the work is to present the subject simply and concisely, leaving illustration and explanation to the teacher, whose freedom text-books too often hamper. Without a teacher, however, this work will possibly be found no harder to master than others.

As far as practicable, exercises, largely numerical, are given on the different Theorems, that the pupil may learn at once the value and use of what he studies.

Hypothetical constructions are throughout employed. Important Theorems are proved in more than one way, lest the pupil rest in words rather than things. Problems are regarded chiefly as exercises on the theorems.

Short Appendices are added on the Analysis of Reasoning and the Application of Arithmetic and Algebra to Geometry.

EUCLID. The Elements of Euclid. A new Text based on that of Simson, with Exercises. Edited by H. J. Hose, formerly Mathematical Master of Westminster School. Fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d. Exercises separately, 1s.

LONG (G.) The Decline of the Roman Republic. 8vo.

Vol. I. From the Destruction of Carthage to the End of the Jugurthine War. 14s.

Vol. II. To the Death of Sertorius. 14s.

Vol. III. Including the third Mithridatic War, the Catiline Conspiracy, and the Consulship of C. Julius Cæsar. 14s.

Vol. IV. History of Cæsar's Gallic Campaigns and of the contemporaneous events in Rome. 14s.

Vol. V. Concluding the work. 14s.

"If any one can guide us through the almost inextricable mazes of this labyrinth, it is he. As a chronicler, he possesses all the requisite knowledge, and what is nearly, if not quite as important, the necessary caution. He never attempts to explain that which is hopelessly corrupt or obscure: he does not confound twilight with daylight; he warns the reader repeatedly that he is standing on shaking ground; he has no framework of theory into which he presses his facts."—Saturday Review.

STUDENT'S GUIDE TO THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE. Revised and corrected in accordance with the latest regulations. Third edition. Fcap. 8vo. 6s. 6d.

This volume is intended to give useful information to parents desirous of sending their sons to the University, and to indicate the points on which to seek further information from the tutor.

Suggestions are also given to the younger members of the University on expenses and course of reading.

"Partly with the view of assisting parents, guardians, schoolmasters, and students intending to enter their names at the University—partly also for the benefit of undergraduates themselves—a very complete, though concise, volume has just been issued, which leaves little or nothing to be desired. For lucid arrangement, and a rigid adherence to what is positively useful, we know of few manuals that could compete with this Student's Guide. It reflects no little credit on the University to which it supplies an unpretending, but complete, introduction."—Saturday Review.

BOOKS FOR YOUNG READERS. In Eight Parts. Limp Cloth. 8d. each; or extra binding, 1s. each.

Part I. contains simple stories told in monosyllables of not more than four letters, which are at the same time sufficiently interesting to preserve the attention of a child. Part II. exercises the pupil by a similar method in slightly longer easy words; and the remaining parts consist of stories graduated in difficulty, until the learner is taught to read with ordinary facility.

Bell's Reading Books

For Schools and Parochial Libraries.

The popularity which the Series of Reading-Books, known as "Books for Young Readers," has attained is a sufficient proof that teachers and pupils alike approve of the use of interesting stories with a simple plot in place of the dry combinations of letters and syllables, making no impression on the mind, of which elementary reading-books generally consist. There is also practical testimony to the fact that children acquire the power of reading much more rapidly when the process involves something more than the mere mechanical exercise of the faculties of sight and memory.

The publishers have therefore thought it advisable to extend the application of this principle to books adapted for more advanced readers; and to issue for general use in schools a series of popular works which they venture to think will in practice be found more adapted for the end in view than the collections of miscellaneous and often uninteresting extracts which are generally made to serve the purpose.

These volumes will be printed in legible type, and strongly bound in cloth, and will be sold at 1s. or 1s. 6d. each, post 8vo.

The first of the series, viz. CAPTAIN MARRYAT'S MASTERMAN READY, which was written expressly for young people, is now ready, condensed, price 1s. 6d.; also,
